DRUNK-YOU MAKES BAD DECISIONS.

How much can a DUI cost you?

On average, a DUI can set you back $10,000 in attorney's fees, fines, court costs, lost time at work, higher insurance rates, car towing and repairs, and more.

Does a DUI impact the community?

The financial impact from impaired-driving crashes is devastating. Based on 2010 numbers, impaired-driving crashes cost the United States $44 billion annually.

Will you go to jail?

If you're caught drinking and driving, you could face jail time. Imagine trying to explain that to your friends and family or your place of employment.

Are there more consequences?

Drinking and driving could cause you to lose your driver's license and your vehicle. This could inhibit you from getting to work, resulting in lost wages and, potentially, job loss.

PUT AWAY SOME DRINKS? PUT AWAY YOUR KEYS.

Drunk driving is the ultimate form of unsportsmanlike conduct. Even if you've had only one alcoholic beverage, designate a sober driver or plan to use public transportation or a ride service.

Have a friend who is about to drink and drive? Take the keys away and make arrangements to get your friend home safely.

Boys’ basketball teams take the Murphy Center floor for first time since 2019

Nine qualifiers from 2020 are back in 2021 field

John Brice for TSSAA.org

It has been a year-long goal to return to the Tennessee Secondary School Athletic Association Boys’ State Basketball Tournament this week, amidst a continuing pandemic that last season robbed 24 teams across the Volunteer State of a shot at a state championship title.

Nine squads this week are back – Clay County, MAHS, Greeneville, Jackson South Side, Upperman, Cleveland, Houston, Oak Ridge and Pearl Cohn -- after earning berths in the tournament a year ago but never lacing up a single shoe inside the 'Glass House' as the virus unleashed its crippling effects in every facet of life.

For some, the price to pay to return to the hardwood has meant regular COVID-19 screenings.

For members of Nashville’s Pearl-Cohn team, the price to pay for returning to the hardwood has meant submitting to daily virus testing.

Not just gamedays.

Not just schooldays.

Every day.

If there’s a practice, there’s a test. If there’s a game, there’s a test; rapid tests are administered via a nurse sent to the school.

“We’ve been taking COVID tests every day. Every day,” says first-year Pearl head coach Larrie Smith, previously an assistant in the program. “I’m just happy we can play under all the circumstances.

“But we had to take one just before practice (Monday), we’ll take one Tuesday, and Wednesday before the game. If we win, we’ll take one Thursday before practice and again Friday and Saturday before the games if we can keep playing. We’ve got some of these kids that have taken 60 COVID tests.”

Sacrifices are bonds as common this week as dribbles and dunks for all participating teams inside Middle Tennessee State University's Murphy Center.

“I was an assistant for (Oak Ridge coach Aaron) Green for five years before this and that's who we play in the first round,” Siegel coach Dyron Birdwell, a former University of Tennessee manager under Bruce Pearl, says. “I’ve talked to him a lot. Both of us are just happy to still be practicing.

“There was a point in time in December we were afraid the season was going to get shut down or if we did finish, it might just be with parents. It means a lot to these kids, to these communities and to show the type of young men that have bought into doing what they are supposed to do. It's tough. And a huge shoutout to Gov. (Bill) Lee and the TSSAA for giving us this opportunity to finish this thing out on the floor.”

Tucked in the Bluff City, Memphis Academy of Health Sciences (MAHS) players meet only on the hardwood floors. The school's been in virtual learning the entirety of the academic year as school leaders and elected officials have grappled with the best path.

“It's a good day for the MAHS community for us to be able to go back to state again, from being so disappointed last year from getting there and not getting that opportunity to play,” says Lions coach Vernon Watkins. “We came in this year and had like half a season, really. But (the students) worked extremely hard this year for this.

“It's very valuable. We've been in virtual learning all year, and they didn't get the opportunity to walk the halls together, didn't get a chance to have that good fellowship with one another at lunch. They go to school all day virtually and come in and practice after school.”

At Cleveland High School, a program with a long-storied tradition on the state stage, the Blue Raiders emerge from southeast Tennessee as a hardened group.

“Well, this is our third year in a row earning our spot to compete in the state tournament and it’s my second as the Runnin’ Raiders head coach," Cleveland's Reggie Tucker says. “Each time has been a special moment, but this time our players were offered a chance to do a very special and unique thing under tough circumstances and facing different roadblocks on the way.”

In addition to the universally shared battle with the pandemic, Tucker's Raiders also are back in the 'Boro after persevering through not one but two season-ending injuries to previous starters.

“For these student-athletes to accomplish so much this season through all the obstacles makes this one so special,” Tucker says. “Last season was a season to remember and one that I’ll never forget, but I owed it to this group to put that season behind us and focus on preparing them mentally and physically on what was ahead. They needed to know that I believed in them and that they could get it done.”

To a coach, it is the shared trait of team-above-self that marks this season as a unicorn; one-of-a-kind.

“That's what the kids wanted, just to compete and have a chance to be where we are now,” Birdwell says. “We got shut down once right at fall break for a positive test, but we've not been shut down to this point in-season and that's a credit to our kids, having to sacrifice some of the memories that you get when you're a senior.”

Adds the Firebirds' Smith, “I'm just very proud of this group. Just to see the development of the young men and the want to get better and the want to have the opportunity to play in the state tournament and to work hard and sacrifice and to try to get to go play ball at some level of college, get a free education so that Mom and Dad aren't paying or so that they don't have student loans in 20 years. I'm proud of them.”

Regardless of what unfolds the next four days in Murfreesboro, Watkins knows these players leave a lasting legacy.

“Every day we always say we have to be disciplined if we want to continue to play, that we have to do what we are supposed to do off the court. It would have been extremely hard for my generation to sacrifice so many social freedoms.

“We've got kids from all parts of the city; southeast, west, all different places. They've come together to make this work. I think about that all of the time.”

It is then, perhaps, the lasting image of this entire championship week.

Girls' teams return to state basketball tournament after 2020 disruption

They're back.

From the COVID-19 pandemic that wrecked the 2020 TSSAA Girls' State Tournament after its quarterfinal rounds while the as-yet-unconquered virus disrupted, halted and forever changed life around the globe.

Back from tornadoes that likewise ravaged the midstate region all the way from west of Nashville east to the Cumberland Plateau last spring.

For Maryville High School's Lady Rebels, back more so as testament to the immense courage of assistant coach Kayla Tillie Rooney, a former standout-player at the school always known for her effervescent attitude.

She's in the fight of her life as she confronts leukemia and finds an entire community, not just coaches and players, rallying at her side.

“We may have been lucky last year because we got to play and know our outcome,” said veteran Maryville coach Scott West, whose squad fell in a see-saw battle against Whitehaven last year in the Class AAA quarterfinals. “We knew we had a special team coming back, but when Coach Kayla Rooney was diagnosed with leukemia, it hit all of us pretty hard.

“It makes all the other struggles in life pale in comparison to what Kayla has had to endure. We wanted to get to Murfreesboro and compete for her, to give it our all, as she fights the toughest battle of her life every day.”

Twenty-four teams descend this week upon Middle Tennessee State University's 'Glass House,' where some players are preparing to don a uniform for the last time ever. Yet the mere event itself is a victory for every player, coach, parent, referee, scoreboard operator and medical expert who helped an entire state persevere for young people to regain a semblance of normalcy in the form of 32 minutes per game.

“With COVID-19 happening over the last year, our kids were put in tough situations and not just our's but everybody in general. We were told to stay home and not do anything,” said Lebanon coach Cory Barrett, whose program is back in Murfreesboro at the state tournament for a third year in a row. “Trying to tell 14- to 17-, 18-year-old kids they can't be around their friends and can't go to Sonic and have a slushie, things like that, you were asking them to take away their high school experience of being together. It was a promotion for laziness and there was just nothing we could do about that.

“For them to come back and jump back into physical work, into mental preparation, into the weight room, into all the things that encompass what we do as a program and them embrace it and run with it, I think it's just something remarkable.”

It's remarkable any year, any level, when individuals coalesce into a team that reaches MTSU's Murphy Center for a 96-hour stretch from Wednesday through Saturday, sneakers squeaking and whistles echoing, with a gold ball as the unified goal.

For Arlington, Clarkrange, Gibson County, Loretto, Macon County, Westview and the aforementioned Lebanon, it's a return to where the world as it was then known traces its expiration.

The disease, as well as mother nature, make this year's event unlike any of its decades of forerunners.

“Well, you know, we were shocked it ended,” legendary Clarkrange coach Lamar Rogers, Tennessee's all-time wins leaders in girls' basketball, said. “It's just been a long journey, a long trip to make it back.”

Like many, Clarkrange's season includes some coronavirus hiccups; this includes a team-wide 10-day quarantine early on in which there were no practices, no interpersonal interactions.

Barrett's program is this week on spring break, after only recently returning to full classrooms and with the discipline and good luck to endure no team-wide – only individual – COVID-19 shutdowns this season.

“It was just something new every day, some other type of stress level,” Barrett said. “We tried not to put that on the kids. We just tried to continue to talk to them about being cautious around other people and things like that.

“We only went back to a full schedule a couple weeks ago, going from about 900 kids to a little over 1800. That immediately gave me a lot of anxiety for our team, but we've been able to separate them for lunches, bring them into the gym during that time. Our administration and teachers have been great; we've pleaded with them to try to help us find some way to social-distance our players in a class of 35.”

His Lebanon team isn't quite a full year removed from winning its quarterfinals opener and preparing for the semifinals when a team dinner and team breakfast, as well as a couple just-in-case practices, became the lasting images of that 2019-20 season.

“Our team was at Chili's eating dinner,” Barrett said. “We didn't tell them; didn't want to say anything for sure. We had worked on our family list that day, we were told it would be immediate family only if the tournament could continue. When it comes across that it's been suspended, postponed at that point, I talked to the team.

“We felt like at that point, no one knew where it was going to go from there, so we came in and met the next morning. Had team breakfast, explained to them where we were.”

Rogers owns too many wins, too many trips along the nearly 200-mile jaunt from Clarkrange west to MTSU and back, to not already have months of addressing this week with his team.

“I think as long you tell them what is going on and they have some facts, they handle it all right,” Rogers said. “You wish everything had been normal but it's not. We've got five seniors, it's affected them a lot. We adjusted homecoming and senior night, and we had those things. Up north, some schools aren't even going at all, which is their decision. But there's a lot of dedication and resiliency in these girls and in young people. They've handled it maybe better than parents.”

Mostly, though, Rogers wishes the worst of this deadly disaster is in everyone's rear-view mirrors – especially young people.

“Hopefully, this is the worst thing they have to go through in their life,” he said, “and they certainly will remember this year forever. We've lost a lot of people. Everyone probably knows somebody who's passed away, but hopefully this is the worst of it.

“I think everything is looking up.”

I don’t know why I have been so successful in my life’s work, but I do know that being able to give back – to help young people get an education, to assist adults who want to go back to school, to allow children to receive excellent medical attention, and now, to have the potential to save 60,000 lives each year through early detection of rectal-colon cancer – this has given me more satisfaction and pure joy than anything else I can imagine doing with my life.” – James W. Ayers
